

“Why Robots Could Soon Replace Fast Food Workers Demanding a Higher Minimum Wage”

—KIRO Radio

Newly developed robotic chef from Japan's MOTOMAN prepares a dish.

Today's union-organized protests against fast food restaurants aren't a battle against management—they're a battle against technology.

Faced with a $15 wage mandate, restaurants have to reduce the cost of service in order to maintain the low prices customers demand.

That means fewer entry-level jobs and more automated alternatives—even in the kitchen.
