Thanks, Michael. I made a few more tweaks after another review – you can view in track changes. All I did was tweak the headline – since the analysis doesn't cover a time period where wage floors for any worker were at $15 – and brought some of the findings of the study into the body of the release.

FYI, the Associated Press is interested in looking at the report as they consider an exclusive – do we have a draft we can share with them? Thanks, all.

I am convinced. Here's an improved version of the release.

My mistake!

I would still delete any reference to the UW work in the press release. If reporters want to inquire about the past study, we can then respond.

I changed the UW references to be about their report from Nov. 2016. Is that OK? Could put them in a para. rather than as bullets. Or take them out altogether.

Tomorrow's release will just highlight your study, correct (ie leave the critique of the UW study until later)? The release still calls out the UW study. Don't want your positive news to serve as a teaser for the UW study.

Best,
Carlo

Jackie,

I am attaching a draft media release for our new report on Seattle-- the one we discussed last week.

The Seattle Mayor's office would like to release the report tomorrow and Rob Duffie of BerlinRosen wants to shop it today to various outlets for an exclusive.

Please look it over and suggest any changes. I am cc'ing the others-- including Kathleen, so they are in the loop and so you can contact them directly with the logistics of the media release.

I am still making some last-minute changes to the report itself. I've attached the current draft so you can see what it's about.

Sorry for the extremely short notice. I've been working morning to evening every one of the past seven days to complete this. The timetable moved up over the weekend.

Michael
